Mananya (?), see Ṛig-veda X. 106, 8.

Manas, as, n. mind (in its widest sense as applied to all the mental powers), intellect, intelligence, understanding, perception, sense, conscience, will; (in phil.) the internal organ of perception and cognition, the faculty or instrument through which thoughts enter or by which objects of sense affect the soul (in this sense manas is always regarded in Hindū philosophy as distinct from the soul [ātman, purusha]; in the Sāṅkhya system it is an internal organ standing between the organs of perception and the organs of action, as an eleventh organ which partakes of the nature of both [cf. indriya]; the Vedānta doctrine is very similar, and in both the appropriate functions or operations of manas are defined to be sankalpa, judging, and vikalpa, doubting; according to the Nyāya-sūtras, the property of the internal organ manas is its not giving rise simultaneously to more notions than one, hence in this philosophy it is held to be an atomic organ or inlet to the all-pervading soul, not allowing this latter, as the thinker or knower, to receive more than one thought or conception at once; according to this system manas is a dravya or substance; it is paramāṇu-rūpa, in the form of an atom, and though distinct from the all-pervading soul is like it, nitya, eternal; in the Sāṅkhya manas, as the internal organ whose vṛitti or function is sankalpa, judging or determining, has a special connection with both buddhi, whose function is adhyavasāya or ascertainment, and ahankāra, whose function is abhimāna or self-consciousness; and in the Yoga and Vedānta manas is connected with both these and a fourth, viz. citta, the organ of thinking, whose operation is said to be anu-sandhāna, investigation; in the Sāṅkhya manas is, as it were, a portion or modification of buddhi, which is there called mahat as the 'great' source of the other internal instruments ahankāra and manas; in the Vedānta manas, whose operation is judging and doubting, is specially associated with buddhi, whose function is said to be niścaya or ascertainment, these two being held to include under them ahankāra and citta, and all four together constituting the whole antaḥ-karaṇa or internal instrument; in the Atharva-veda XIX. 9, 5, manas is enumerated after the five senses as a sixth; in the Ṛig-veda it is sometimes joined with hṛid or hṛidaya, the heart, cf. IV. 37, 2, X. 10, 13; in Manu VII. 6. with ćakshus, the eye); the spirit or spiritual principle, the breath or living soul which escapes from the body at death (called asu in animals), mind, thought, imagination, conception, idea, fancy, (manasā cintitam karma, an act thought of in the mind; manaso javīyān, swifter than thought, Ṛig-veda I. 183, 1; manasi nihitaḥ, impressed on the mind, Megha-dūta 98; manaḥ kri, to direct the mind or thoughts towards any object, with loc. or dat., e. g. pāpe or pāpāya kurute manaḥ, he directs his mind to sin; manaḥ sam-ā-dhā, to recover the senses, collect one's self); excogitation, reflection, reflecting, opining; the thing excogitated (Sāy. = stotra, a hymn), invention; intention, design, purpose, inclination, will, wish, (yadi manasā manyase, if thou hast the inclination, if thou art minded; sometimes with dat., e. g. manas tasmai ćakre, he felt an inclination for him; in this sense manas is occasionally used at the end of compounds, and even with the infin., like kāma, q. v., e. g. sva-kanyā-pradāna-m°, intending or wishing to give his own daughter in marriage; drashṭu-m°, having a mind to see, wishing to see); heart, affection, desire, longing after; disposition, mood, temper, good-will, favour; spirit, energy, mettle; N. of the twenty-sixth Kalpa; of lake Mānasa; manaso dohaḥ, N. of a Sāman. — Mana-āpa, as, ā, am, gaining or winning the heart, taking the fancy, attractive, pleasing, beautiful. — Mana-ringa, as, ā, am, a word of doubtful meaning in Ṛig-veda X. 106, 8. — Manaḥ-kānta = manas-kānta, q. v. — Manaḥ-kshepa, as, m. Mahlāṇa-pura, am, n., N. of a city, (perhaps for mahlaṇa-pura.)

मा 1. mā, ind. (causing a following ch to be changed to cch, see Gram. 48. c), a particle of prohibition and of negation, usually translatable by 'not,' or sometimes used as a conjunction and equivalent to 'that—not, lest, would that—not;' [cf. the use of Gr. μή; Lat. ne.] Mā is most commonly employed in prohibition or deprecation, when it may be joined with the imperative (e. g. mā brūhi, speak not; mā lajjasva, be not ashamed; maivaṃ vada, speak not thus); often also with the aorist, especially in later Sanskṛit, when the augment is generally dropped (e. g. mā kṛithāḥ, do not make; mā tyākshīḥ, do not abandon; mā śuchaḥ, grieve not; mā bhaishīḥ, fear not; mā nīnaśaḥ, destroy not; vyathāṃ mānubhūḥ, feel not pain; or with the sense 'lest,' as in Manu VIII. 15, dharmo na hantavyo mā no dharmo hato vadhīt, justice must not be destroyed, lest justice being destroyed destroy us); often with addition of the particle sma (e. g. mā sma vādīḥ, speak not; mā sma gamaḥ, go not); sometimes with the imperfect, the augment being still cut off (e. g. mā sma bhavat, may he not become; mā sma karot, let him not do; mainam abhibhāshathāḥ, do not speak to him, cf. Pāṇ. VI. 4, 74); occasionally, in epic poetry &c., with an aorist, without elision of the augment (e. g. mā kālas tvām aty-agāt, let not the season pass by thee; śraddhā no mā vy-agamat, may faith not depart from us); not unfrequently with the potential, in the sense of 'wishing that anything may not happen' (e. g. mā sma janayet putram īdṛiśam, may she not bring forth such a son! mā Yamam paśyeyam, may I not see Yama! mā kūryād akāryam, O that he may do nothing wrong!); and even with the precative (e. g. mā bhūyāt, may it not be!); more rarely with the potential, in the sense of 'prohibition' (e. g. mā smainaṃ pratyudikshethāḥ, do not look at him); sometimes with the future, in the sense of 'lest, that—not' (e. g. mā tvāṃ śapsye, lest I curse thee, that I may not curse thee); even with the fut. pass. part. (maivam prārthyam, it must not be so requested); and even with the pres. part. (e. g. mā jīvan yo duḥkha-dagdho jīrati, he ought not [to be] living who lives consumed by pain); sometimes mā takes the place of the simple negative na (e. g. gaċċha vā mā vā, you can go or not go; mā jetavyaḥ, he is not to be conquered; mā gantum arhasi, thou oughtest not to go; katham mā bhūt, how may it not be); occasionally without a verb, which must be supplied from the context (e. g. mā śabdam, i. e. with ellipsis of kuruta, do not make a noise; mā nāma rakshiṇaḥ, may it not be the watchmen! maivam or mā tāvat, not so, i. e. let it not be so; or with mā repeated, thus mā mā, mā maivam). In the Veda mā is sometimes followed by the particle u, blending with it into mo (e. g. Ṛig-veda V. 65, 6, mā maghonaḥ pari khyatam mo asmākam [putrāṇ], deny us not who are rich in offerings, nor indeed our sons [according to Sāy. mo = maiva]; and Ṛig-veda I. 38, 6, mo shu vadhīt [Sāy. = sarvathā vadham mā kārshīt], let him not on any account destroy); [cf. Zend and Old Pers. mā; Gr. μή; perhaps Lat. ne.] — Mā-ċira, as, ā, am, not long, short; (am), ind. without delay, shortly, quickly (generally after an impv. or before an aor. without augment, and sometimes for na-ċiram, e. g. gaċċha mā-ċiram or mā-ċiraṃ gamaḥ, go without delay; vrajishyāmi mā-ċiram, I will set forth without delay). — Mā-vilambam or mā-vilambitam, ind. without delay, shortly, quickly.

मा 2. mā, cl. 3. P. A. (in Ved. P.) mimāti, mimīte, mame, mātum, to low, bellow, roar, bleat, sound, make any sound or cry (especially said of cows, calves, goats, &c.; according to Nirukta II. 9, māyuṃ mimāti = māyuṃ śabdaṃ karoti; cf. rt. mīm, mīmayati, 2. maya, mayu, mayūra): part. of the Intens. memyat, in Ṛig-veda I. 162, 2, said to mean 'bleating as a goat;' (according to Sāy. = either hanyamāna, fr. rt. mī, or memeśabdaṃ kurvat.)

1. māyu. See p. 772, col. 2.

मा 3. mā, cl. 2. P. māti, cl. 3. III. 19, yāċñā-karmaṇi, in the act of praying); cl. 4. A. māyate, mamau, mame (3rd pl. mamire), māsyati, -te, amāsīt, amāsta, Prec. meyāt, māsīshṭa, mātum, to measure, mete; to measure off, mark off, limit; to measure (by any standard), compare with, (tadīyair nayanair amimīta loċane, she compared her eyes with theirs, Kumāra-s. V. 15); to measure across, measure or pass through, traverse (with adhvanaḥ, in Ṛig-veda I. 146, 3; but according to Sāy. mimāna = sampādayitṛi, making, causing); to measure out, apportion, deal out, impart, give, grant (e. g. in Ṛig-veda IV. 44, 6, nū no rayiṃ mimāthām is said to mean 'mete out opulence for us'); to prepare, arrange; to form, make, create, construct, build, effect (Ved.); to display, exhibit, show, display one's self (e. g. in Ṛig-veda III. 29, 11, yad amimīta mātari is said to mean 'when he has displayed himself in the maternal atmosphere or firmament,' where, according to Sāy., tejas is to be understood); to correspond in measure, find measure or room in (cl. 2. with loc., e. g. te yaśo-rāśir bhuvana-trītayodare māti, thy mass of fame finds room in the interior of the three worlds); to infer, conclude: Pass. mīyate, Aor. amāyi, to be measured &c., to be inferred: Caus. māpayati, -yitum, Aor. amīmapat, to cause to be measured or built, to have measured out or prepared; to measure, mete off; to build, erect: Desid. P. A. mitsati, -te (Pāṇ. VII. 4, 54, 58): Intens. mamāti, māmeti, memīyate (Pāṇ. VI. 4, 66); [cf. Zend mā, 'to measure or make;' mā, f. 'measure;' Gr. μέ-τρο-ν, μέτρ-ιο-ς, μῖ-μέ-ο-μαι, μί-μη-σις, μῦ-μ-ο-ς: Lat. mê-tâ-re, mê-tâ-ri, mê-ti-or, mensa, mensûra: Old Slav. me-ra: Lith. mē-ra, 'measure;' ma-tůti, 'to measure;' méta-s, 'time, a year:' Russ. mje-ra, 'measure;' mje-rits, 'to measure:' Hib. mead, 'a balance, a scale;' meadaighim, 'I weigh, balance, consider.']

4. mā, mās, f. measure, (in the formula mā ċhandaḥ, pra-mā ċhandaḥ, prati-mā ċhandaḥ); Ved. a kind of metre.

Mīmāṃsaka, as, m. one who thinks over or reflects deeply upon, one who examines or proves; an examiner, investigator, prover; a follower of the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā system, (see below.)

Mīmāṃsana, as, m. one who examines or proves, a tester, prover, examiner, investigator.

Mīmāṃsā, f. reflection, consideration, opinion, investigation, examination, discussion, (kāvya-m°, the theory of poetry, art of poetry; N. of a work); examination (of the sacred text),' N. of one of three great divisions of orthodox Hindū philosophy (divided like the Nyāya and Sāṅkhya into two systems, viz. the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā or Karma-mīmāṃsā founded by Jaimini, and the Uttara-mīmāṃsā or Brahma-mīmāṃsā or Śārīraka-mīmāṃsā by Bādarāyaṇa, the latter, however, is more commonly called the Vedānta system, while the Pūrva-mīmāṃsā is usually called the Mīmāṃsā; though the Mīmāṃsā by Jaimini is classed among the six orthodox systems of philosophy, it does not concern itself like the others with the nature of soul, mind, and matter, but rather with a correct interpretation of the ritual of the Veda and the solution of doubts and discrepancies in regard to the Vedic texts caused by the discordant explanations of opposite schools; it may therefore be described as a critical commentary on the first or ritual portion of the Veda, and its only claim to the title of a philosophy consists in its philosophical method of interpretation, the topics being arranged according to particular categories, such as authoritativeness, indirect precept, &c., and treated according to a kind of logical sequence, which commences with the proposition to be discussed, the doubt arising about it, the Pūrva-paksha or primâ facie and wrong view of the question, the right argument or refutation of the Pūrva-paksha, and the conclusion; see, moreover, Pūrva-mīmāṃsā: Jaimini, whose date is unknown, taught his system in twelve books, each book containing either four or eight chapters, and each chapter being subdivided into sections comprising one or more Sūtras; the oldest commentary on these obscure aphorisms being the Bhāshya of Śabara-svāmin, explained by the great Mīmāṃsā authority Kumārila-svāmin or Kumārila-bhaṭṭa, and again elucidated by Mādhavāćārya in the Jaiminīya-nyāya-mālā-vistara). — Mīmāṃsā-kṛit, t, m. 'the author of the Mīmāṃsā system,' an epithet of Jaimini. — Mīmāṃsā-kautūhala-vṛitti, is, f., N. of a commentary by Vāsudeva Adhvarin (also called Vāsudeva Dīkshita) on the Mīmāṃsā-sūtras of Jaimini. — Mīmāṃsā-kaustubha, as, m., N. of a commentary by Khaṇḍa-deva on the Mīmāṃsā-sūtras of Jaimini. — Mīmāṃsā-jīva-rakshā, f., N. of a Mīmāṃsā work. — Mīmāṃsā-tattva-candrikā, f., N. of a work by Gopāla-bhaṭṭa on various Mīmāṃsā topics. — Mīmāṃsā-tantra-vārttika, am, n., N. of a commentary by Kumārila-svāmin on the Sūtras of Jaimini. — Mīmāṃsā-naya-viveka, as, m., N. of a commentary by Bhavanātha-miśra on the Mīmāṃsā-sūtras of Jaimini. — Mīmāṃsā-nyāya-prakāśa, as, m., N. of a celebrated elementary work on the Mīmāṃsā system by Āpa-deva (son of Ananta-deva and pupil of Govinda). — Mīmāṃsā-paribhāshā, f., N. of an elementary treatise by Kṛishṇa-dīkshita on the Mīmāṃsā. — Mīmāṃsā-bhāshya-vivaraṇa, am, n., N. of a commentary by Kumāra-svāmin on a work entitled Mīmāṃsā-bhāshya. — Mīmāṃsārtha-pradīpa (°sā-ar°), as, m., N. of a disquisition by Śaṅkara-śukla on the provableness of the Veda. — Mīmāṃsā-vidhi-bhūshaṇa, am, n., N. of a Mīmāṃsā work by Gopāla-bhaṭṭa, written in refutation of the Vidhi-rasāyana. — Mīmāṃsā-śiromaṇi, is, m. 'crest-gem of the Mīmāṃsā,' epithet of an author, (also called Nīla-kaṇṭha.) — Mīmāṃsā-sarvasva, am, n., N. of a work by Halāyudha. — Mīmāṃsā-sūtra, am, n., N. of the twelve books of aphorisms by Jaimini on the interpretation of the Veda; see Mīmāṃsā, col. 2. — Mīmāṃsā-stavaka, as, m., N. of a Mīmāṃsā work by Rāghavānanda.

Yajushya, as, ā, am (fr. yajus), Ved. relating to ceremonial.

Yajus, us, n. religious reverence, veneration, worship, oblation, sacrifice (Ved.); that by which a sacrifice is effected, a sacrificial prayer or formula; a text of the Yajur-veda or rather a technical term for certain words or Mantras muttered in a peculiar manner at a sacrifice, (these Mantras were properly in prose as distinguished from the metrical ṛić which was recited, and the metrical sāman which was sung, see mantra, 2. ṛić; although, however, the prose Yajus is a distinctive feature of the Yajur-veda, this Veda is in real fact chiefly composed of verses taken from the Ṛig-veda, which may then also be called Yajus, cf. Yajur-veda below); N. of the Yajur-veda, q. v., (in this sense also frequently yajūṃshi, n. pl.); (us), m., N. of a man. — Yajush-śākhin, ī, inī, i, familiar with a Śākhā of the Yajur-veda: — Yajur-maya, as, ī, am, consisting of verses of the Yajur-veda; [cf. ṛin-maya.] — Yajur-lakshmī, īs, f., N. of a particular formula. — Yajur-vid, t, t, t, knowing the Yajus, conversant with sacrificial formulas, one who is familiar with the Yajur-veda. — Yajur-vidhāna, am, n., N. of a work. — Yajur-veda, as, m. 'the sacrificial Veda,' the collective body of sacred Mantras or texts which constitute the Yajur-veda, (these Mantras, though often consisting of the prose Yajus, are frequently identical with the Mantras of the Ṛig-veda, the Yajur-veda being only a collection of liturgical forms or rather a sort of sacrificial prayer-book for the Adhvaryu priests formed out of the Ṛig-veda, which had to be dissected and re-arranged with additional texts for sacrificial purposes; to serve these purposes, the hymns of the Ṛig-veda are scattered about piecemeal, verses of the same hymn being often transposed, verses from different hymns combined, and even those of different poets brought together into one and the same hymn; in fact the compilation of the Yajur-veda resulted from the gradual growth of a complicated ritual in connection with those sacrifices without which the Hindū believed it was impossible to secure the favour of his gods, and for the performance of which the unsystematic collection of hymns in the Ṛig-veda was unsuited: the great characteristic feature of the Yajur-veda is its division into two distinct collections of texts, the one called Taittirīya-saṃhitā or Kṛishṇa, i. e. 'Black' [because in it the Saṃhitā or simple collection of texts and Brāhmaṇa or explanation of the rites in which the texts were employed is confused]; the other called Vājasaneyi-saṃhitā or Śukla, i. e. 'White' [because in this, which is thought to be the more recent of the two recensions, the Saṃhitā is cleared from confusion with its Brāhmaṇa, and therefore looks white and orderly]: the order of sacrifices, however, of both divisions of the Yajur-veda is similar, two of the principal being the Darśa-pūrṇa-māsa or sacrifice to be performed at new and full moon, and the Aśva-medha or horse-sacrifice; cf. Taittirīya-saṃhitā, Vājasaneyi-saṃhitā.) — Yajurveda-śrāddha, N. of a work (treating of the prayers and rites to be used at the anniversaries of the death of parents according to the school of the Yajur-veda). — Yajur-vedin, ī, inī, i, familiar with the Yajur-veda. — Yajurvedi-vṛishotsarga-tattva ("sha-ut°), am, n., N. of part of the Smṛiti-tattva by Raghunandana on the release of a bull according to the teaching of the Yajur-veda. — Yajurvedi-śrāddhatattva, am, n., N. of certain verses by Raghunandana on the anniversaries of the death of parents according to the school of the Yajur-veda. — Yajush-kṛita, as, ā, am, Ved. performed with a Yajus, consecrated or dedicated with a sacrificial formula. — Yajush-kṛiti, is, f., Ved. consecration or dedication with a sacrificial formula. — Yajush-kriyā, f., Ved. a rite or ceremony accompanied with a Yajus. — Yajush-tama, Ved. superl. of yajus. — Yajush-tara, Ved. compar. of yajus. — Yajush-tas, ind., Ved. from a Yajus; in relation to a Yajus; on the authority of the Yajur-veda. — Yajush-tā, f. or yajush-tva, am, n., Ved. the state of a Yajus. — Yajush-pati, is, m. यद् yad, yas, yā, yad (the actual base of this relative pronoun is ya, except in compounds and in the derivative yadiya; its proper correlative is tad, q.v., but other demonstrative pronouns and pronominals, such as etad, idam, adas, tādṛiśa, īdṛiśa, sarva, often occur in the correlative clauses; see 3. ya), who, which, what, that, whoever, whichever, whatever, any. The relative yad often precedes the noun to which it refers, this noun being either put in the same case with the relative or joined with the demonstrative (e. g. yasya narasya buddhiḥ sa balavān or yasya buddhiḥ sa naro balavān, of whatever man there is intellect he is strong); sometimes the relative stands alone, an antecedent noun or pronoun being understood from which it takes its gender and number (e. g. dhanena kiṃ yo na dadāti, what is the use of wealth [to him] who does not give?); or the relative itself may be dropped (e. g. na karoty a-kāryaṃ tam āryam āhuḥ, they call him honourable [who] does nothing improper to be done). Sometimes the relative yad, with or without its demonstrative, appears to be used redundantly to eke out the metre, or perhaps to give force to the noun with which it is connected, even the neut. sing. being occasionally thus used in connection with words of a different gender and number, and the relative being itself almost untranslatable (e. g. yan maraṇaṃ sa 'sya viśrāmaḥ, that very death is his rest; andho jaḍaḥ pīṭha-sarpī saptatyā sthaviras-ća yaḥ, a blind man, an idiot, a cripple, and a man seventy years old; yat kshāntiḥ samaye śrutiḥ Śiva Śivety-uktir mano-nirvṛitir asau mukti-mārge sthitiḥ, forbearance, obedience to ordinances, saying 'Siva, Siva,' contentment of mind, this is continuance on the road of emancipation); and sometimes this redundant or emphatic use of yad causes a sudden change of construction from accusative to nominative (e. g. apoheta rasān aśmano lavaṇaṃ ćaiva paśavo ye ća, he should avoid liquids, stones, and salt, and all cattle). The relative yad is often repeated to express 'whoever,' 'whatever,' 'whichever,' &c. (e. g. yo yaḥ, whatever man; yā yā, whatever woman; yad yad, whatever thing; yo yo yāvatīthaḥ, whichever [is] how many soever degrees, i. e. in proportion as each of which is advanced in the series); or the repetition of yad may be caused by a kind of attraction, the second relative being equivalent to an indefinite pronoun (e. g. yo yasya bhāvaḥ syāt, whatever may be the disposition of any one; yat rocate yasmai, whatever is pleasing to any one) or the relative may be used to express similar indefinite meanings when joined with kaścit, kaścana, ko 'pi, kaśca, ko vā (e. g. yaḥ kaścit or yaḥ kaścana, whosoever; yat kiṅcit or yat kiṅcana, whatsoever; yena kenāpy upāyena, by any means whatsoever; yāni kāni ca mitrāṇi, any friends whatsoever; yasmai kasmai ca, to any one whatever; yasmin kasmin vā deśe, in any country whatever); or even with a demonstrative pronoun (e. g. yasmai tasmai, to any one whatever; yasmāt tasmāt, from any one, from this or that person; yena tena karmaṇā, by any act whatever) or sometimes the relative yad is used alone with the indefinite sense 'any one,' &c. (e. g. striyaṃ spṛiśed yaḥ saṅgrahaṇaṃ smṛitam, should any one touch a woman it is called an adulterous act; yāṃ ajāṃ vṛiko hanyāt pāle tat kilvisham bhavet, if a wolf kill any she-goat the blame must be on the keeper). Yad is also connected in a peculiar manner with the personal pronouns, which, when placed immediately after the relative, appear to derive force or emphasis from this juxtaposition (e. g. yo 'ham, I that very person who; yas tvam, thou that very one who, &c.). Yad in the neut. sing. is used as an adverbial conjunction equivalent to 'for which reason,' 'on which account,' 'wherefore,' 'since,' 'as,' 'because,' 'when,' 'while,' 'if,' 'with regard to,' 'as to,' &c.; or still oftener as a simple conjunction meaning 'that,' especially after the verbs of saying, hearing, &c., or such words as kāma, yukta, āścarya, &c. (e. g. dhīvarair uktaṃ yat —, it was said by the fishermen that —; śrutaṃ trayā yat —, it has been heard by thee that —; āścaryaṃ yat —, it is a wonder that —); frequently followed by a verb in the indicative (e. g. ayaṃ nūtano nyāyo yad arūtiṃ hatrā santāpaḥ kriyate, this is a new doctrine that having killed an enemy remorse is experienced); less frequently in the potential (e. g. esha me kāmo yat sa rājyam āpnuyāt, this is my desire that he may obtain the kingdom); yad api, although; yaṭ-ca, that (according to Pāṇ. III. 3, 148, with potential, after expressions of impossibility, disbelief, hope, disregard, reproach, and wonder, e. g. na śrad-dadhe yaṭ-ca tatra-bhavān vṛishalaṃ yājayet, I do not believe that your Highness will allow a Śūdra to sacrifice); yad vā, or, or else, whether, (in the writings of commentators yad vā generally occurs when an alternative reading or meaning is proposed, and may commonly be translated by 'or,' 'or else'): in philosophical writings yaḥ is said to be used as a synonymn for purushaḥ: [cf. Zend ya: Gr. ὅ-ς, ἥ, ὅ, ἵνα, ὡς: Goth. ja-bai, 'if;' jau, 'whether:' Lith. ji-s, 'he;' ji, 'she;' ju, 'it:' Slav. i, ja, je.] — Yaṭ-chandas, ās, ās, as, having which metre. — Yaṭ-chīla, as, ā, am (yad + śīla), having which disposition. — Yat-kara, as, ī, am, which doing or undertaking. — Yat-kāma, as, ā, am, Ved. which desiring, wishing which. — Yat-kāmyā, ind., Ved. with which view or design. — Yat-kāraṇam or yat-kāraṇāt, ind. for which cause or reason, on which account, in consequence of which; since, because, as, while. — Yat-kārin, i, iṇī, i, which doing or undertaking. — Yat-kiṅcedam (°ca-idam), the commencement of the sacred text Ṛig-veda VII. 89, 5, (incorrectly read yat-kiṅcidam.) — Yat-kṛite, ind. on account of which, for which reason, wherefore, why. — Yat-kratu, us, us, u, Ved. having which resolution, forming which plan. — Yad-abhāve, ind. in the absence of which, for want of which, in default of which. — Yad-artha, as, ā, am, having which object in view, having which intention; (am, e), ind. on which account, for which purpose, for the sake of which, wherefore, why, &c.; as, since, when, because, whereas. — Yad-ātmaka, as, ṭkā, am, having which being or existence. — Yad-ṛiṭchā, f. acting as one lists, following one's own inclination, self-will, spontaneity, wilfulness, independence, (according to native lexicographers = svairitā, sveṭchā, svāṭchandya, nirnimitta); accident, an accidental occurrence or event, chance, contingence, (yad-ṛiṭchayā, as one likes, of one's own accord, spontaneously, by accident, accidentally, incidentally, by chance, unexpectedly) (in grammar) a noun which is neither a generic nor specific term nor noun of agency, one either not derived from authority or not possessing meaning. — Yadṛiṭchā-tas, ind. spontaneously, by accident, &c. (= yad-ṛiṭchayā above). — Yadṛiṭchābhijña (°ṭchā-abh°), as, m. a voluntary or self-offered witness. — Yadṛiṭchā-lābha-tushṭa, as, ā, am, satisfied with obtaining what comes spontaneously, easily satisfied. — Yadṛiṭchā-saṃvāda, as, m. accidental or spontaneous conversation, incidental intercourse. — Yadṛiṭchika, as, m., scil. putra, a son who offers himself for adoption. — Yad-devata or yad-devatya, as, ā, am, Ved. having which godhead or divinity. — Yad-dvandva, am, n., N. of a Sāman. — Yad-dhetos, ind. (fr. yad vāhishṭham, the first two words of Ṛig-veda V. 25, 7), N. of a Sāman. — Yad-vidha, as, ā, am, of which sort (= Lat. qualis). — Yad-vritta, am, n. anything which has occurred, an adventure; any form of yad. — Yan-nimittam, ind. on which account, for which reason, in consequence of which, through which. — Yanmaṇḍishṭhiya, am, n., N. of a Sāman. — Yan-madhye, ind. in the centre of which. — Yan-maya, as, ī, am, formed or consisting of which. — Yan-mātra, as, ā, am, having which measure, of which dimensions or circumference, &c. — Yan-mūrdhan, ā, m. the head of whom.

Yadā, ind. at what time, when, whenever, (generally followed in the correlative clause by tadā or 'atas or tarhi or in Ved. by ād it); whereas, since, as; if; yadā yadā, whenever; yadā tadā, at any time whatsoever; yadā yadā—tadā tadā, as often as—so often; yadaiva—tadaiva, when indeed—then indeed; yadā prabhṛiti—tadā prabhṛiti, from whatever time—from that time forward; yadā-kadā-ca, Ved. as often as, whenever; yadā-kadā-cit, at any time; na yadā-kadā-cit, never at any time: yadā is sometimes joined in the same sentence with other relatives used indefinitely (e. g. yo 'tti yasya yadā māṇsam, when any one eats the flesh of any one).

Yadi, ind. (in Ved. sometimes lengthened to yadī), if, in case that; whether; if haply, if perchance; provided that, when. As a conjunction meaning 'if,' yadi is sometimes joined with the present indicative (e. g. yadi jīvati bhadrāṇi paśyati, if he live he will behold prosperity); sometimes with the potential (e. g. yadi rājā daṇḍaṃ na praṇayet, if the king were not to inflict punishment; or with omission of yadi, e. g. vṛiko hanyād ajāṃ, if a wolf should kill a goat); sometimes with the future (e. g. yadi na karishyanti tat, if they will not do that); sometimes with the aorist or even imperfect or perfect (e. g. yadi Prajā-patir na vapur asṛākshīt, if the Creator had not created the body; yady etan na me 'kathayat, if he were not to tell me that; yady āha, if he had said); sometimes with the conditional (e. g. yady anujñām adāsyat, if he should give permission); sometimes yadi may be translated by 'that' (e. g. nāśaṇse yadi jīvanti, I do not expect that they are alive); rarely yadi is joined redundantly with ced (e. g. yadi ced yat syāt, if it should be); or with purā (e. g. purā yadi paśyāmi, before that I see); yady-api, even if, although, (followed by tathāpi, q. v., or tadapi in the correlative clause); yadi vā, or if, or whether; or else, or; or rather (= atha vā); yadi—yadi vā, yadi vā—yadi vā, yadi vā—vā, if—or if, whether—or.

Yama, as, m. a rein, curb, bridle (Ved.); a driver, charioteer (Ved.); restraining, controlling, taming, keeping in check, restraint, (vāćāṃ yamaḥ, restraint of words, silence); self-control, any great moral duty or observance, (as opposed to niyama, a minor duty or observance, see Manu IV. 204; some of the Yamas are as follow, 'restraining the organs of sense,' 'chastity, and the control of all sensual desires,' 'refraining from violence or injury,' 'patience,' 'truthfulness,' 'honesty'); a twin, one of a pair or couple, a fellow, (yamau, 'the twins,' an epithet of the Aśvins and of their twin children by Mādrī, called Nakula and Sahadeva); a symbolical expression for the number two; N. of the god who presides over the Pitṛis, q. v., and rules the spirits of the dead, (he is regarded in Post-vedic mythology as the appointed Judge and 'Restrainer' or Punisher of the dead, in which capacity he corresponds to the Greek Pluto and to Minos; he is one of the eight guardians of the world as regent of the South quarter, in which direction in some region of the lower world is his abode, called Yama-pura; thither a soul, when it leaves the body, is said to repair, and there, after the recorder, Ćitra-gupta, has read an account of its actions kept in a book called Agra-sandhānī, it receives a just sentence, either ascending to heaven or to the world of the Pitṛis or being driven down to one of the twenty-one hells [called the awful provinces of the kingdom of Yama] to be born again, after undergoing its appointed recompense of bliss or pain, in higher or lower forms of being; in unison with these functions Yama is sometimes called 'king of Justice' or simply 'Justice' [see dharma-rāja, dharma], sometimes 'Rod-bearer' or 'Noose-bearer' [see daṇḍa-dhara, pāśin], sometimes 'lord of the Pitṛis or Manes' [see pitṛi-patī], sometimes 'king of Death' or simply 'Death' [see mṛityu-rāj, mṛityu, kāla, antaka], sometimes 'god of the Śrāddha' [see śrāddha-deva]: in the Vana-parvan of the Mahā-bhārata, l. 16754, where there is a story of his appearing to a dying man, he is described as dressed in blood-red garments, with a glittering form, a crown on his head, glowing eyes, and, like Varuṇa, holding a noose, with which he binds the spirit after drawing it from the body, in size about the measure of a man's thumb: he is otherwise represented as grim in aspect, green in colour, clothed in red, riding on a buffalo, and holding a club in one hand and noose in the other; he is said to possess two four-eyed watch-dogs, called Karbura [= Cerberus?], 'spotted,' and Syāma, 'dark,' which guard the road to his abode: in the later mythology he is always represented as a terrible deity inflicting tortures, called yātanā, on departed souls: according to some the earlier legends point to the original meaning of his name being 'twin,' and make him a kind of first man, Yama and his twin sister Yamī being the first pair of beings born from Vivasvat, 'the Sun,' and his wife Saraṇyū; the seventh Manu, another form of the first man, being also born from the Sun, and so regarded as a brother of Yama, [see especially Rig-veda X. 10, part of which is ascribed to the authorship of Yama Vaivasvata, and cf. Vaivasvata]; Yama is, however, described as resisting sexual alliance with his sister; Yama is also regarded as the regent of the Nakshatra Apabharaṇī or Bharaṇī, see yama-devatā); N. of the author of a hymn to Vishṇu; of the author of a Dharma-śāstra; of the planet Saturn, (Saturn being regarded as the son of Vivasvat and Chāyā); of one of Skanda's attendants (mentioned together with Ati-yama); a crow [cf. yama-dūtaka]; (ās), m. pl., N. of a class of deities with Buddhists; (ī), f., N. of Yama's twin sister, who is identified in Post-vedic mythology with the river goddess Yamunā; (am), n. a pair, brace, couple; (in gram.) the twin letter of any consonant, (when a nasal consonant follows immediately after one of the four other consonants in each class, the consonant preceding the nasal may be doubled, and the interposed letter is then called its yama or twin, thus in kkṅ, the interposed k is a yama; but this interposed letter is generally understood, and not written in practice); pitch of the voice, tone of utterance, key; (as, ā or ī, am), twin-born, twin, double, coupled, paired. — Yama-kālindī, f., N. of Saṁjñā (wife of the Sun and, according to one account, mother of Yama). — Yama-kiṅkara, as, m. II. 22. fr. rt. 1. rud above; according to others fr. rt. 1. ru + dra fr. rt. 2. dru, to run; connected with rodas, q. v., and perhaps with rudhira), crying, howling, roaring, one who cries or roars, dreadful, horrible, terrific, awful; great, large; (according to the fanciful etymologies of native writers, the following meanings are also assigned to this word), driving away evil; running about and roaring; praiseworthy, to be praised, (according to Naigh. III. 16) = stotṛi, a praiser, panegyrist, worshipper; (as), m. 'the Roarer' or 'Howler,' N. of the god of tempests and father of the Rudras or Maruts, (originally perhaps the mere personified roaring of the storms, but as the crackling or raging of fire may resemble the sound of wind, so in the Veda the god of storms is sometimes identified with the god of fire; though generally represented as a destroying deity whose terrible shafts bring death or disease on men and cattle, he is also addressed as benevolent and auspicious [śiva], and is even supposed to have a healing efficacy from his chasing away vapours and purifying the atmosphere; hence he has various epithets in the Veda, such as 'multiform,' 'terrible as a wild beast,' 'tawny-coloured,' 'wearing braided hair' [kapardin], 'celestial boar,' 'armed with a strong bow and fleet arrows,' 'cause of prosperity to man and beast,' 'possessor of healing remedies,' 'greatest of physicians,' &c.; he is of course ruler of the Rudras, who are the same as the storm winds, more usually called Maruts, and who are often associated with Indra [see marut]: in the later mythology the epithet śiva, 'propitious,' which does not occur as a name in the Veda, was employed as the real name of the destroying deity, being at first applied as an euphemism to propitiate him: moreover the character of the deity lost its special connection with storms, and developed into a personification of the destroying principle generally, though even the Epic and Purāṇic Śiva was regarded as the generator as well as destroyer: moreover a new class of beings, described as eleven in number, though still called Rudras, took the place of the original Rudras or Maruts: in the Veda only three groupings of deities into classes appear to be recognised, Indra belonging to the Vasus, Varuṇa to the Ādityas, and Rudra to the Rudras or Maruts; but in Manu XI. 221. the Maruts are enumerated as a fourth group, being there distinguished from the eleven Rudras: in Viṣṇu-Purāṇa I. 7. Rudra is said to have sprung from Brahmā's forehead, and to have afterwards separated himself into a figure half male and half female, the former portion separating again into the eleven Rudras, who were so called because they 'ran about crying aloud' [rudanād drāvaṇāc-ca, cf. rts. 1. rud, 2. dru]; hence these later Rudras are sometimes regarded as inferior manifestations of Śiva, and most of their names are also names of Śiva; these names are variously given in the different Purāṇas; those of the Vāyu are Ajaikapād, Ahvi-bradhna, Hara, Nir-ṛita, Īśvara, Bhuvana, Aṅgāraka, Ardha-ketu, Mṛityu, Sarpa, Kapālin: according to other accounts the Rudras are represented as children of Kaśyapa and Surabhī or of Brahmā and Surabhī or of Bhūta and Su-rūpā); a form or manifestation or N. of Śiva (in the later mythology, as explained above; according to the Viṣṇu-Purāṇa I. 8. Rudra is one of the eight forms of Śiva; he is elsewhere reckoned among the Dik-pālas as regent of the north-east quarter); a symbolical expression for the number eleven (from the eleven Rudras, see above); a mystical epithet of the letter e; Calotropis Gigantea; N. of various persons; of a lexicographer; of a poet; of a king; (ās), m. pl. the Rudras (described above); an abbreviated expression for the texts or hymns addressed to the Rudras [cf. rudra-japa]; (ā), f., N. of a wife of Vasu-deva; of a daughter of Raudrāśva; = rudra-jaṭā; (ī), f. a kind of lute or guitar; [cf. rudra-vīṇā; cf. perhaps also Gr. λύρα.] — Rudra-kalaśa, am, n. Vasishṭha, as, m. (superl. of vasu or vasumat; cf. vasīyas), 'the most wealthy,' N. of a very celebrated Vedic Ṛishi or inspired sage (owner of the 'cow of plenty,' called Nandinī, offspring of Surabhi, which by granting all desires made him, as his name implies, master of every vasu or desirable object; he was the typical representative of Brāhmanical dignity, and the legends of his conflict with Viśvā-mitra, who raised himself from the military to the sacerdotal class, though probably founded on the actual struggles which took place between the Brāhmans and Kshatriyas, were doubtless mostly invented to impress the mind with the power and superiority of the priesthood; a great many hymns of the Ṛig-veda are ascribed to these two great rivals, those of the seventh Maṇḍala, besides some others, being attributed to Vasishṭha, while those of the third Maṇḍala are assigned to Viśvā-mitra; in one of Vasishṭha's hymns he is represented as king Su-dās's family priest, an office to which Viśvā-mitra also aspired; in another hymn Vasishṭha claims to have been inspired by Varuṇa, and in another [Ṛig-veda VII. 33, 11] he is called the son of the Apsaras Urvaśī by Mitra and Varuṇa, whence his patronymic Maitrāvaruṇi; in Manu I. 35. he is enumerated among the ten Prajā-patis or Patriarchs produced by Manu Svāyambhuva for the peopling of the universe; in the Mahā-bhārata he is mentioned as the family priest of the solar race or family of Ikshvāku and Rāma-ćandra, and in the Purāṇas as one of the arrangers of the Vedas in the Dvāpara age; in the first and second chapters of the Raghu-vaṃśa he is described as releasing king Dilīpa from his curse of childlessness by directing him to attend upon the cow Nandinī in atonement for an offence he had unintentionally committed against the parent cow Surabhi; according to one account Vasishṭha married Ūrjā, 'Strength;' according to another, Arundhatī, one of the Pleiades, by whom he had seven sons [see arundhatī]; other legends make him one of the seven great patriarchal sages regarded as forming the stars of the Great Bear [see ṛishi]; his name is often written Vaśishṭha, q. v., in which case it must be connected with vaśa and vaśin); N. of the author of a law-book (perhaps intended to be ascribed to the Vedic Ṛishi above); (ās), m. pl. the family of Vasishṭha; (Vasishṭhasyāṅkuśa and Vasishṭhasyānupadam, N. of two Sāmans.) — Vasishṭha-tantra, am, n., N. of a Tantra work. — Vasishṭha-putra, ās, m. pl. वि 1. vi, ind. (thought by some to be for an original dvi, meaning 'in two parts;' as a preposition or prefix to verbs it is opposed to sam, q. v., and expresses) apart, apart from, asunder, in different directions, to and fro, about, away, away from, off, &c. (e. g. vi-yuj, to disjoin, separate; vi-dṛī, to tear asunder; vi-kṛī, to scatter in different directions; vi-ćal, to move to and fro; vi-ćchid, to cut away, cut off); when prefixed to some roots, vi gives a meaning opposite to the idea contained in the simple rt. (e. g. krī, to buy; vi-krī, to sell; smṛi, to remember; vi-smṛi, to forget); in other cases it appears either not to affect or simply to intensify that idea [cf. naś, vi-naś, hiṃs, vi-hiṃs]. Vi may also be used with verbs or nouns, and other parts of speech derived from verbs, to express 'division' [cf. vi-bhid, vi-bheda, vi-bhaj, vi-bhāga]; 'distinction' [cf. vi-sṭsh, vi-śesha, vi-vić, vi-veka]; 'discrimination' [cf. vy-avaćchid, vy-avaćchedа]; 'distribution,' 'arrangement,' 'order' [cf. vi-dhā, vi-dhāna]; 'opposition' [cf. vi-rudh, vi-rodha]; 'discussion,' 'deliberation' [cf. vi-ćar, vi-ćāra]; 'privation' [cf. vi-nī, vi-nayana]. Vi may also be used with nouns, adjective or substantive, not immediately connected with verbs, to express 'difference' [cf. vi-lakshaṇa]; 'variety' [cf. vi-ćitra]; 'distinction' [cf. vi-śeshа]; 'intensity,' 'greatness,' 'largeness' [cf. vi-karāla]; 'change' [cf. vi-kāra]; 'manifoldness' [cf. vi-vidha]; 'contrariety' [cf. vi-loma]; 'impropriety,' 'deviation from right' [cf. vi-janman, vi-karmika]; 'negation' or 'privation' (e. g. vi-jana, devoid of men; in this sense vi is used like nis, q. v., and like 3. a, q. v.); in this latter signification the use of vi often corresponds to that of the Latin dis, se, and the English prefixes a, ex, de, dis, in, un, &c.; [cf. Old Germ. wi-dar, 'against;' Pers. بی bī, 'without;' perhaps Lat. vē, in words like ve-cors, ve-sanus, vi in di-vi-dere; Lith. be, 'without;' Slav. beζ (perhaps = vahis).]

वि 2. vi, is, m. f. (according to Uṇādi-s. IV. 133. fr. rt. vā, the final of the rt. being rejected; a form vī is also given, and according to some the word vi may be fr. rt. 1. vī), Ved. a goer; a bird [cf. vīka]; a horse (from its fleetness); a rein (according to Sāy.); epithet of the Soma; of a sacrificer; the eye (?); heaven (?); the region of the wind (?); [cf. Zend vi; Gr. οἰ-ωνό-ς, αἰ-ε-τό-ς, ὠόν, ὠόν; Lat. avis, ovum; Old Germ. ei; Angl. Sax. æg.] — 1. vi-gata, am, n. (for 2. see under vi-gam), the flight of birds. — 1. vi-cchāya, am, n. (for 2. see s. v.), the shadow of a flock of birds.
